Did you know?

At MLSE LaunchPad, every program cycle we focus on a different life skill. Life skills are skills that can be taught along with sport skills like kicking and shooting, but can also be helpful in other areas of life like at school or home. This cycle's life skill is self-esteem.

What is self-esteem? It is the value or worth that you place on yourself. This cycle will use a lot of cues towards effort, trying new things, and reflections on personal improvement.

How is self-esteem useful in other parts of life? Believing in your own personal value is important for setting high-expectations for yourself in school and in life, dealing with setbacks, sticking up for yourself, making good decisions, and overall life-satisfaction.

How can I help promote self-esteem at home? Ask your kids about the life skill and how they've been using it at MLSE LaunchPad. Help them make a plan to try something new or set a new challenge for themselves and then help them through the ups and downs of achieving these things – focus on what goes right, and learn from what doesn't go right.
